

Patera Kori Studios

Patera Kori Studios is the collaborative sculpture studio of daughter/father team of Darlene Davis and Eduardo Uttridge. The studio name is a tribute to their Greek heritage. In Greek, "Patera" means father and "Kori" means daughter. Darlene and Eduardo work in many art mediums but have primarily focused on kinetic wood sculptures since 2013.

Darlene graduated George Washington University with a degree in Marketing/Advertising. Eduardo began his career as a nuclear engineer before changing directions that led him to own a construction company and then an art school in the Washington DC area.
